How to Curb Excessive Barking
Drs. Foster & Smith Educational Staff

Dogs bark for many reasons. It is a natural behavior and primary method of communication. They bark to warn others or defend a territory, to seek attention or play, to identify themselves to another dog, or as a response to boredom, excitement, being startled, loneliness, anxiety, or teasing. Four proven methods to help you stop unwanted barking behaviors include:

1. First, avoid the temptation to reinforce your dog’s bark. Do not give verbal reassurance, a treat, or physical attention to a barking dog.

2. Minimize your dog's barking with proper and consistent training. In addition, try using a calming pheromone spray in your pet's environment.

3. Train your pet to respond to a one-word command, such as "Enough." During training, divert his attention from the barking and sternly say "Enough." If he stops barking, reward him with a great treat. Only give the treat if your dog stops barking.

4. Along with these other behavior modification techniques, you may try a bark collar, a training tool designed specifically to address habitual chronic barking. It gives your pet a warning tingle or mild static correction when he barks, which quickly trains your pet to avoid the behavior that initiates the correction.

Bark control is important in developing a dog that is obedient and able to relax. Your success in this area will create a more harmonious home.

Our Recommendations
Solve the Bark Problem: 4 Ways to Curb Excessive Barking

Train-Well® No-Bark Collar

Comfort Zone Spray

Tasty Snacks Chewy Treats

Related Articles:
- Barking Control: Solutions to End Problem Barking Behavior
- Dog Bark Control: General FAQs
- Dog Obedience Training: Training Collars General FAQs